

Do I need a business license to run a business?

Yes, your business will need an Occupational License (also referred to as a business license) to operate in any form within the city, county or state in which business is being conducted. Occupational Licenses are issued by the Tax Collector. Anyone providing merchandise or services to the public, even though a one person or home-based occupation, must obtain an occupational license. Some businesses are also subject to county or municipal (city) zoning codes and local, state and federal regulations.
